

Awareness for Families Without Surveillance

What This Is

This page explains an awareness option (Alerta Home) that can help families supplement-- not replace-- professional services.

Care managers are often asked for low-friction ways that families can stay informed between visits, assessments, or transitions.

Alerta Home is a passive awareness system that detects meaningful changes in daily movement or activities, without cameras, recorders, or wearables.

Who This Is For

- Adult children coordinating care remotely.
- Families between service levels.
- Clients valuing privacy and autonomy.
- Situations where observation—not monitoring—is appropriate.

When Families Typically Consider This

- Between visits or assessments.
- After hospital or rehab discharge.
- While evaluating placement or care intensity.
- When families want reassurance without escalation.

Awareness for Families Without Surveillance

What This Is Not

- A clinical monitoring device.
- A substitute for care management.
- A behavioral tracking tool.
- A reporting system for compliance. Alerta Home is intended to complement human care, not replace professional judgment or presence.
